"Think of Me While Absent, Darling." Such is the title of a very sweet world of meaning. An affecting scene occurred at the Union Pacific depot three or four days ago, in which this charming song played a prominent part. A young lady this city was seated of a passenger coach of in the transfer train, waiting to take her departure for some place in panies in this country, came up Iowa for a visit. By her side stood a young man, evidently one of her many admirers. After wishing her a pleasant trip and a happy visit, he bid her a most affectionate farewell, and presenting her with a copy of the song, "Think of Me while Absent, Darling," he parted from her. A few moments afterwards she changed her seat, and forgot ticket office. The boys of the "Benevolent Corner" are inclined to who was no sooner The knees of his pantaloons were of sight than out of mind. 'Twas ever thus from childhood's hour, &c. The boys of the corner are now singing: "Think of me whi e absent, Darling, Think, oh think lheavy on the think] of me, For the heart that loves so for dly, Longs to be with thee," &c.

Chorus-Think of me and hear the whispering Of my voice far away, For I feel that tho art waiting, Only waiting to obey.

A PERILOUS TRIP.

Young San Francisco Hoodlum Rides from the Pacific Coast to Omaha, on the Trucks of a Passenger Coach, in Five Days.

Friday afternoon, as the Union Pacific express train from the West arrived at the depot, a young vagabondish looking scamp, about fourteen years of age, was observed crawling out from under the trucks of a passenger coach. A few moments afterwards a gentleman, who had just got out from the cars, approached the boy, and calling him "young San Francisco hoodlum," pitched into him, and accued him her music, and when she changed of having induced his son, cars on the other side of the river whom he was in search of, to run the music still remained untouched away from home. The boy denied in the transfer car, until Joseph | the accusation, and the war of words Tehon, passenger agent of the St. | became so loud, that the disturbance Joe road, who had been an observer had to be stopped by Captain Payne, of the whole transaction, captured the depot policeman. worn out by the continual jolting of the cars, and his appearance generally was rather dilapidated. He had been accompanied by the gentleman's son as far as Kearney Junction, where he"changed trucks" for St. Joe, and where the "hoodlum" had agreed to meet him. He asserted that he had not persuaded the boy to run away; he did so of his own inclination. The gentleman took the train for St. Joseph, while the hoodlum, after expressing his determination to proceed to the same point in the same way that he had come to Omaha, stole his way on to the trucks of the transfer train, and rode over the bridge, and just as the train for St. Joe pulled out, he secured a similar place beneath the cars, notwithstanding he was watched and forbidden to do so.
